CARLOS PARTIDA

He woke up with the midday's rays of sun. What he first felt, even before opening his eyes, was that he was soaked and he had sand attached to his wet clothes. That was the moment when he realized he was on a beach.

Afterwards, he started to stand up. He felt his body numb, so he supposed he had been unconscious for a few hours. When he sat up, he looked up to find out where he was. However, all that he could see was the exotic plants surrounding the seashore.

All of a sudden, he glimpsed the safety raft which had brought him to that place after the shipwreck. He remembered some things, but that was something that was best forgotten.

Next to the raft, he found his umbrella. It was a very valuable object, directly imported from Germany. He picked it up, and in that moment, he started laughing as he hadn't laughed in a while. Out of all his belongings, he had taken with him a simple umbrella, just because of its value, and it reminded him of the shadows of his past. He grabbed the umbrella and threw it away with all his might.

It was then when he turned around and gazed at his new home, where he could start a new life full of happiness.

DANIELA PAUCAR

"Happiness"

It is a trip with friends,
a unique path,
a really charming adventure that catches you in its magic,
a veil that covers your life.
They are fleeting moments that look eternal.
It is all and nothing.
It is the knowledge of your truth,
It is to discover the secrets of what is unknown.
It is to wrap yourself in the robe of wisdom,
the beating of an excited heart,
every smile of your life.
It is to fly to infinity,
the shine of your loving eyes,
the innocence of a child.
It is freedom.
It is to see someone you love happy.
YOU are HAPPINESS.
I am HAPPINESS.
